

No Body Deserves To Live On A Chain.

Help limit the tethering of animals at home.

Today in our community there are animals who are alive but not living; animals who are outside but not playing; animals who know sunlight but not warmth. There are more of these chained dogs than meet the public eye.

Isolated in backyards on tethers as short as a couple of feet, these innocent animals are forced to endure the elements, attacks by animals and people and, perhaps worst of all, solitary confinement.

They're lonely, they're frustrated, and many of them are losing their minds. Statistics show that chained dogs are much more likely to bite than unchained dogs. And the incessant barking so common to tethered dogs is textbook neurotic behavior.

It's not their fault. It's ours for not limiting the tethering of animals at home.

Break the Chain

Contact:

Visit unchainyourdog.org or dogsdesevebetter.com for more information on chaining.